The order includes a comprehensive package of soldier and vehicle training systems, anti-tank and sniper training weapons, as well as communication systems and exercise control software (EXCON) which is used for after-action review. Saab will also provide training support in Denmark at four designated sites.

“With this delivery, Denmark will have one of the most modern and flexible Combat Training Centres in Europe tailored for the demands of today and tomorrow. We are excited to be part of building that future,” says Joakim Alhbin, head of Saab’s business unit Training and Simulation.

The Combat Training Centre is a part of Saab’s world leading live training offer and includes a complete package for military training.
